We need to talk about our transport future

A Public Conversation on transport in Glasgow

The public conversation runs from September 21st to October 30th 2020

What's happening?

Glasgow City Council is thinking about how people and goods move around the city daily, how to transform the city centre, and how to create liveable neighbourhoods. We are writing 3 new transport-related plans on these issues.

The city is changing and growing. How, for what, and how much we travel is also changing.

We want you to be a part of a public conversation on Glasgow's transport future.

What should these new plans achieve?

We know that transport in our city needs to change and have been exploring the problems that need to be tackled.

We think that:

- Transport should contribute to a successful and just transition to a carbon neutral, clean and sustainable city
- Transport should play a positive role in tackling poverty, improving health and reducing inequalities
- Transport should respond and contribute to continued and inclusive economic success and a dynamic, world class city
- Places should be created where we can all thrive, regardless of mobility or income, through liveable neighbourhoods and an inclusive City Centre.

What do you think? Are these what should drive transport policy decisions in the city for the next 10 years?

How will we get there?

We'll build on good work that has been done over the last decade, and seize opportunities. We've got ideas for policies which will help achieve our transport vision.

What do you think we should do to transform transport in Glasgow?

How can I take part?

How will my feedback be used?

We will listen to what you have to say, and show how your contributions are shaping the plans as they are developed.

From November 2020, we'll be writing the plans based on what we've heard. When they're drafted, we'll ask you again – what do you think?

From November 2021, the plans will become city policy, and we will start work to achieve the outcomes.
